

My grid essentially says that the main ethical quandaries are the misleading of the public, the fact that it was done for personal political gain, and the fact that it was done to manipulate the outcome of an election. The argument for it being ethical would be that it was done on a public platform, where anyone can post anything, however it is still intentional manipulation and misleading of the public.

As I stated, the public was directly affected at least by the misinformation posted, the election being manipulated, and all the ones manipulated are on the platform, so I crossed that as well. I didn't cross the political gain because for the non-political public this doesn't matter as much. The nation could have been affected by this, depending if they successfully swayed the election or not, so I crossed the election manipulation row for that. Then any people holding political power are affected by the election manipulation and by the political misinformation, so I crossed those rows.
